GUARD FLAG OF CONFEDERACY AT CITY HALL

Between the hours of ten and twelve to-day over 300 persons visited City Hall to get a view of the Confederate flag, captured by General Benjamin F. Butler, from the New Orleans City Hall in 1862, and which it was now proposed to return to that city, under the guidance of a select committee of the city fathers.

To-day the flag rested on the table of the chairman of the Board of Aldermen, carefully guarded by Assistant City Clerk John T. Priest, who has been at the hall today acting as guide to those who wished to see the flag.

That a committee will accompany the flag on its return trip is now settled. The Mayor approved of the flag being shipped back by express to meet with care.

Many Nations Join in Effort to Save Men of French Diver Lutin, Buried in 100 Feet of Water in Bay of Tunis—Many Hours Submerged.

PARIS, Oct. 17.—Many nations have joined France in an effort to save the fifteen members of the crew of the sunken submarine boat Lutin, commanded by Lieutenant Propron. Warships are rushing from various stations to aid in the rescue.

Denmark, Germany and Great Britain are doing everything in their power to give aid. The chief hope in floating the submerged vessel in time to save the lives of those in peril is the Danish salvage steamer, Berge Wilhelm, which happened to be near the scene of the accident.

The Danish vessel has machinery capable of lifting 1,500 tons, but the submarine boat lies in thirty fathoms of water, and it is pointed out that the submarine boat Farafel, which sank last Summer in the same vicinity, but in only ten fathoms of water, was nine days at the bottom and when she was refloated all her crew were dead.

Wanted--

(Signed)
THE PLUNDERBUND

A newspaper which struggles feebly, but faithfully, to voice the sentiments of the corporations which seek privileges from the people contains the following pathetic warning:

That "Moran's" candidacy threatens many interests which have reason to support Republican success is no less certain than the fact that such interests have made no move, thus far, to interest themselves in the campaign.

The newspaper which utters this warning to the corporations is known to be closely under the thumb of United States Senator Lodge, the boss of the Republican party in Massachusetts.

Mr. Lodge is the official "go-between" for the Plunderbund.

What are the "interests" which Mr. Moran's candidacy threatens, and which "have reason to support Republican success"? Obviously they are:

The Boston & Maine Railroad.

The Boston & Albany Railroad.

The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

The Lighting Trust.

The Traction Trust.

The Machinery Trust.

The mill owners who, at the last session of the Legislature, furnished the funds with which the "Overtime" bill was killed.

The bucket shop keepers.

The newspaper which aims to be the mouthpiece of the privilege-seeking "interests" further alleges that these "interests" "have made no move thus far to interest themselves in the campaign."

Obviously the Plunderbund has not contributed so freely as Senator Lodge desires to the campaign of its own party.

Money is needed quickly to defeat Moran. Will not the good, kind "interests" please take notice and send a few more hundred thousand dollars to Senator Lodge and his poverty-stricken campaign committee?

"She That Longs to

Sancho Panza

Quoted for the Benefit of a Dissatisfied,
Foolish Young Woman

A young woman of Washington dislikes her life—small wonder, since she works as a typewriter at ten dollars a week.

Ten dollars a week and typewriting and modern prices for rent and food do not make an amusing combination.

This young woman, however, advertises her case to the world with much regrettable detail and a great deal of bad taste.

She describes herself, physically, mentally and morally, as well as she can—instead of waiting for some ardent poet to do it for her. She expresses an innocent belief in her own great capacity for intellectual work, and she really does seem—assuming that she wrote her own advertisement—to be rather a clever young person.

She tells the reporters that since she issued her advertising, in which she bluntly announces that "typewriting is h—l," she has had ten interesting people call on her, whereas before NOBODY called.

The five-legged calf has many callers also; the normal, well-behaved four-legged calf has no callers at all—it kicks alone, neglected in the meadow. But it is better off than the five-legged calf, really.

This young woman who advertises herself, the size of her eyes, and the diameter of her ambition, will really find that she isn't so very happy, now that she has succeeded in advertising herself out of a quiet and dull life into a noisy, brief and not pleasant notoriety.

We quote for the benefit of this young woman, and of other young women discontented—sometimes with good reason and sometimes without—the wise words of fat Sancho Panza, seeking the foolish daughter of Diego de la Liana (see the last page of Chapter 81 of "Don Quixote"). Sancho said:

"An honest maid should be still at home, as if she had one leg broken. A hen and a woman are lost by meddling; and she that longs to see LONGS ALSO TO BE SEEN. I need say no more."

Thousands of women, old and young, have dreadfully dull lives, HARD LIVES. But they cannot better themselves by plunging into reckless advertising of their troubles; they cannot possibly make their condition better by throwing aside any of the great qualities of modesty, reserve, that have made life at least tolerable for thousands of women materially more badly off than this dissatisfied, energetic young person of Washington.

There is wisdom for dissatisfied young women, of the more prosperous class especially, in Sancho Panza's remark, "She that longs to see, longs also to be seen."

Many women are tortured by the desire for notoriety. They do not realize that for a good woman to be conspicuous is to be unhappy, unless conspicuousness is forced upon her against her will by the development of some very great talent.

Of the women talked about and advertised, by themselves or by others, the majority are really not happy, and they will be more unhappy as they get older.

The young lady of Washington who advertises her desire to get out of her present line of life to get into another is full of strange fancies. She says that she wishes to develop her dramatic education, and also "to found a new school of fiction." All her hopes and advertising will end, we fear, less cheerfully than she imagines.

Our advice to the young lady would be this:

Learn to be a BETTER typewriter. It is far better to be a good typewriter than a bad actress. If you think you are able to write, go ahead and try, BUT DON'T STOP TYPEWRITING IN THE MEANWHILE.

If you think how badly off you are—you certainly are not fortunate—think of the other women more to be pitied than yourself, and wonder what you can do to help them.

Use your influence, if you have any, upon men that vote. Get married, if you find a sound, good-natured, capable young man—but don't accept any that might be attracted by your advertisement. They wouldn't be worth having.

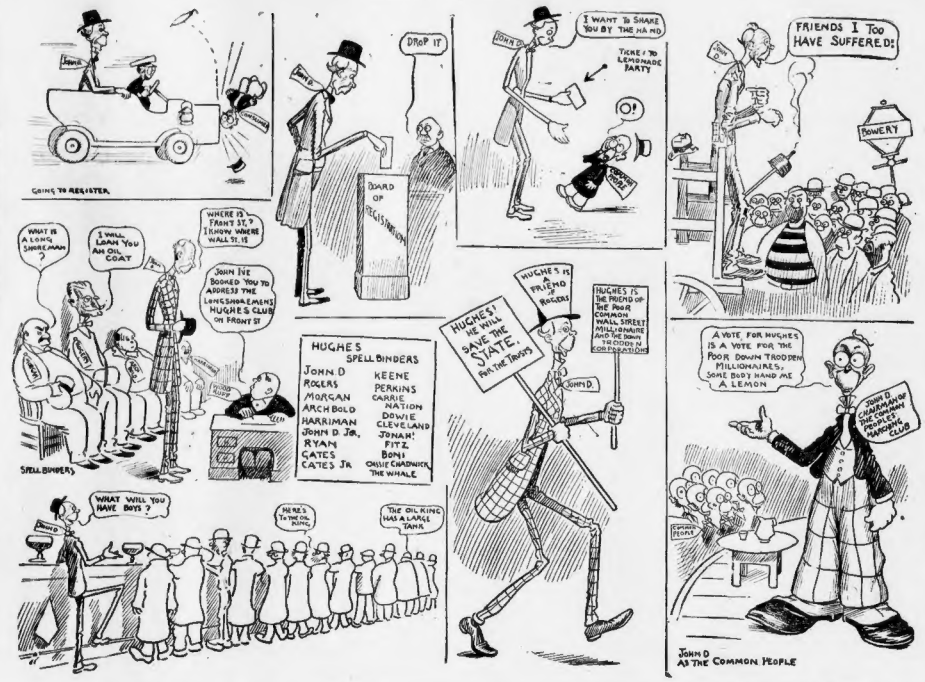

Remember that the task of all the young men and the young women, and the old women as well, on this earth is to work TOGETHER to improve government, bring about such a condition in society as will enable good men to get good pay for their work, AND MAKE IT UNECESSARY FOR THE WOMEN TO WORK AT ALL, to say nothing of their working for slave wages.

We do not print here the name of the self-advertising young lady; it is not desirable to do so foolishness by increasing the number of letters that will probably reach her.

What Last Night's Meeting Means

The Democracy of Boston spoke in Faneuil Hall last night and sent to the Democracy of Massachusetts a message which clearly read: "John B. Moran will be elected Governor."

Not a speaker who addressed the great throng within the historic walls, nor the great throng which waited for hours outside, unable to find even breathing room inside, doubted for a moment the issue of the campaign after this heart throb of the public.

No such ratification meeting was ever known in Boston before. It was, in brief, the most remarkable political gathering ever held in this city.

It was an extraordinary outburst of public enthusiasm. The Guild and Draper men who went there out of curiosity returned to party haunts with a cold chill. The meeting was a notification to Corporation and Individual Graters that the people of Massachusetts are aroused.

It was a warning to the Beacon Hill lobby that the day when the Massachusetts Legislature could be bought like fish and sausages is past. It was a notification to Curtis Guild, Jr., and Judge Dana that the defeat of the Overtime Bill will be rebuked at the polls.

It was a notification to Eben S. Draper that no man who refuses to employ union labor and who dictates to free Americans how and for whom they shall vote will ever be re-elected Lieutenant-Governor of this State.

There are no factions in the Boston Democracy to-day. The Faneuil Hall ratification welded the party into a solid voting unit.

This is the last day for registration in the City of Boston. Put every Democrat and every independent on the list.

"Wearing Broad Smiles"

(From the Worcester Labor News.)

THE latest intimation to be credited to W. R. Hearst is the voluntary ad- vance in wages to the printers, jour- nals, pressmen and mailers employed on the San Francisco Examiner.

The union scale now being paid in San Francisco is $3 per day. Mr. Hearst, recognizing the fact that printing expenses are increasing, and that his paper's wages are not sufficient to provide a fair living under present conditions, announced that until May 31, $1 per day will be added to the salaries of the employees.

All the other papers in San Francisco followed Mr. Hearst's action and made similar increases, and it is reported that the Boston Herald and Globe have been prompted by Mr. Hearst's action in making voluntary advances to their own. The printers of San Francisco it is said, are wearing broad smiles.

IN THE NEW HAVEN ROAD GOING INTO THE COAL BUSINESS.
Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:
There is an apparently well-founded rumor in Worcester that the New Haven railroad is negotiating for the purchase of all the whole and retail coal business in the city.
